WHO IS HE?

Jolly little charming "poet," Oh, I love you, and you know it; How I dream and sigh for thee. None can know but you and me. Now, I know the reason why you, dear John, have passed me by: And the day will no er arrive. Never can we take that drive Down the hill and through the branch, Round the hill to Johnny's "ranch." Ever will my heart besad. Weeping for my bonnie had— swentest song-bird, Fare Thee Well !

I MET HIM AT THE CIRCUS.

Yes, I met him at the circus, But his name I dare not tell; For twas there I learned to love him, "Not wirely, but too well."

He took a seat beside me Henvens! I almost fainted, When he wrote upon a paper, "I wish to get acquainted.

And now I am acquainted. I I'll assure you 'tis a "mash,' He has a fine new buggy. And his hands with diamonds flash. And I like this charming fellow.

But I know I'll never win him "Till the pigs begin to fly." For they say he is a masher, And of the first degree, But I'll let you know I'll balk him

And for him I'd gladly die;

If he tries that game on me. For I'm a country "tar-heel," And kind of go it slow, And I don't want any masher-But a good old Texas beau.

All trains on time November 18th. An immense crowd was at the Union depot last night when the trains came in, and everyone seemed to be talking about the races. Main street is rapidly building up below Ninth. The newly-paved street has started a boom in the building line.

RACES. Everything in Rendiction for the Grand Everything in Rendiness for the Grand Meeting to be Inaugurated To-morrow. Yesterday afternoon a GAZETTE reporter was out at the course of the Fort Worth Driving Park association, and was surprised to see everything so completely ready for the meeting to commence Tuesday. Usually corporations are so slow about starting that much work is yet to be done when all should be complete. This association, however, seems a notable exception to the rule. It is evidently officered by men of energy and business principles. Though there was but a limited time in which to have an almost limitless amount of work done, yet they bent themselves to the task, and to-day, on the eve of the inaugural meeting, all is done, and Fort Worth has a course and accourtements of which any city of its size may well be proud. The grounds are located about a mile from the square, in a northeasterly direction. They are in a seeluded spot that can not be seen until one is almost upon them. Turning a bend in the road after a pleasant drive, the tall white gate is directly in front, and stretching out from it are the high, closely boarded entirely around the Meeting to be inaugurated To-morrow. a disappointment to many a boy, for they extend entirely around the grounds. About two hundred yards from the gate is the grand stand, which, for convenience and adaptability, can not be excelled. The front is an arc of a circle. Behind the next salling size the support of the standard railing rise the concentric seats, which extend the entire length of the stand. extend the entire length of the stand, with the exception of a five-foot space in the center which is used for an aisle. The scats are ten in number, and all are sufficiently clevated to give a good view of the entire track, and each successive seat is well clevated above the next below. Sufficient space above the next below. Sufficient space is afforded on each rise between the scats to allow free passage, though the scats may be crowded. The stand has three approaches, one at each end, where ten-step stairways are placed, and one at the rear, which is of course considerably higher. All three stairways have strong railings, which reuder crowded passage up and down entirely safe. At each end a wide passage is afforded upward from the stairway, while parties entering the stand by the rear stairway may either go while parties entering the stand by the rear stairway may either go down the center aisle, or by traversing the passage at the rear of the stand seek a seat near eith tend. A close calculation shows that over 1500 people may be seated in the stand. But fully five hundred more can stand in the space underneath, at the rear of which booths are to be placed, and as many more could find standing room back of the seats and in the aisles. At the front of the stand, directly beyond the center aisle, is the reporters' stand which is large enough to aerommodate not only all the local press but all vis-which is large enough to accommodate not only all the local press but all visiting pencil-shovers. The telegraph wire has been put up, and results with be flashed promptly. About fifteen feet in front of the grand stand is a boarded fence, extending the entire length of the stand, a very wise precaution against danger from horses that feel inclined to jump the course. There are two tracks, the running track being the outer one. It is just one mile in length. Inside of this track is the track to be used for trotting and pacing. Both tracks are bounded by a rail four feet high. Directly opposite the reporters' stand, just within the inner track, is the judge's stand, which looks as neat as a canary eage. The lower part of this is to be used by the secretary of the association in rescenting entries washing out.

The lower part of this is to be used by the secretary of the association in recording entries, weighing out, etc. Both tracks are first-class, great attention having been paid to putting them in the best possible condition. They are probably as level as any in the country. Good judges present yesterday say that they are very fast, and that with the horses to be here, excellent time should be very last, and that with the horses to be here, excellent time should be made. At the north end of the track are the stables, which are well con-structed and are sufficient in number to accommodate 150 horses easily. There were about forty horses already stalled, and many of these were being well worked on the track while others were being led about for exercise. were being led about for exercise. Everybody in Fort Worth possessing Everybody in Fort Worth possessing a carriage or able to hire one seemed to be there driving around, possibly on the lookout for pointers. Most of the horses, however, that are to take part in the races were not there, not having arrived from Gainesville. But these, numbering about eighty, are probably there now, being expected by the night train. To-day there will be a great deal of hard work done on the track. He who is there before breakfast this morning will certainly get some valuable tips for to-morrow's races. The association has offered good purses, the sociation has offered good purses, the horses are here, and now it remains for the people of this section to show their kindly appreciation of the efforis of the association to provide them with good sport by a full attendance. Pools on the races will be sold to-night at the Cattle Exchange, corner of Houston and Second.

Astempt to Wreck a Train.

From a gentleman who got in from Gainesville last night a GAZETTE reporter learned that when the train was within about three miles of this city the engineer discovered a rail across the track and stopped the train just behind the obstruction. As the train was heavily loaded little speed was being made at the time or the train would have been wrecked, probably with a loss of life, as between two and three hundred people were on board.

Mr. Collister did not speak very encouragingly of the prospect of immediate success, though he intimated that if local talent did not soon take held and organize a company, foreign capital would. He stated that the electric light was now used in Galveston, Houston, Dallas, San Antonio and Marshall. Companies have been organized in Austin and El Paso, and all the necessary machinery ordered. Gainesville and Denison were organizing, while the prospect in Waco was good.
